

TIMES CAMERA LOOKS OVER UNCLE SAM'S FARM AT ARLINGTON

Uncle Sam, scientific and practical farmer, is doing big things for the agricultural interests of the nation at his experimental station in Arlington county, just across the Potomac river from Washington.

Long regarded as a purely theoretical farmer, with a staff of editors to prepare bulletins and pamphlets over mahogany desks, Uncle Sam, through the Department of Agriculture, has been conducting his own experiments at his own farm, and based on results there has caused to be prepared information for farmers.

The photographs on this page show intimate views of the harvest season at the Arlington station. Plans are being made to transfer the greenhouses of the department from the District of Columbia to Arlington, thus making possible a year around schedule of experimentation.